

BY LASSEN'S MINGLE SOFA AND TIRED MAN ARMCHAIR – NOW IN VELOUR

The Mingle sofa and Tired Man armchair were both originally designed by Flemming Lassen in 1935. Having reintroduced both design icons in recent years, by Lassen now presents them in exciting and unique velour variants.

A fabric that can trace its use back to the 1930s, velour is an exceptional match to finer more refined furniture and holds the striking forms of both Mingle and the Tired Man very well. Fluffy and comfortable, velour has a tactile nature that gives you the urge to touch it and experience the defined curves of the furniture in a whole new way.

The new Mingle and Tired Man in velour work well in combination with today's minimalistic Nordic style and create a delightful connection between the old and the new. The velour furniture adds a softness and cosiness to a stylish and sleek interior, highlighting all of the beautiful things to be found in the fabric. Available in two fresh and eye-catching colours, the tone of the fabric almost seems to shimmer along the lines of the furniture as the light bounces off it.

For Flemming Lassen, the function of Mingle was clear; he wanted to create a sofa made for conversation that was comfortable enough for people to stay seated in and talk together for long periods of time. The expansive curved armrests at each end of the sofa were designed to encircle the sitters, generating intimacy and transforming the sofa into a cosy place to relax and chat.

In Flemming Lassen's own words, the Tired Man was
